

A Modern Sermon

"A Modern Sermon" from an English paper, "illustrating the method upon which some persons construct their discourses," republished in the Boston Transcript:

Old Mother Hubbard, she went to the cupboard
To get her poor dog a bone;
But when she got there the cupboard was bare,
And so the poor dog had none.

These beautiful words, dear friends, carry with them a solemn lesson. I propose this evening to analyze their meaning and to attempt to apply it, lofly as it may be, to our everyday life.

Old Mother Hubbard, she went to the cupboard
To get her poor dog a bone.

Mother Hubbard, you see, was old; there being no mention of others, we may presume she was alone; a widow—friendly, old, solitary widow. Yet did she despair? Did she sit down and weep, and add a new wrinkle to her hands? No! She went to the cupboard. And here observe that she went to the cupboard. She did not hop, or skip, or run, or jump, or use any other peripatetic artifice; she solely and merely went to the cupboard.

We have seen that she was old and lonely, and we now further see that she was poor. For mark, the words are "the cupboard," not "one of the cupboards," or the "right hand cupboard," or the "left hand cupboard," or the one above, or the one below, or the one under the stair, but just the cupboard—the one little humble cupboard the poor widow possessed. And why did she go to the cupboard? Was it to bring forth golden goblets, or glittering precious stones, or costly apparel, or feasts, or any other attributes of wealth? It was to get her poor dog a bone! Not only was the widow poor, but the dog—the sole prop of her age—was poor, too. We can imagine the scene. The poor dog crouching in the corner, looking wistfully at the solitary cupboard, and the widow going to that cupboard—in hope, in expectation maybe—to open it, although we are not distinctly told that it was not half open or ajar—to open it for the dog.

But when she got there the cupboard was bare.
And so the poor dog had none.
"When she got there!" you see, dear brethren, what perseverance is. You see the beauty of persisting in doing right. She got there. There were no turnings and twistings, no slippings and sidings, no leaning to the right or falterings to the left. With glorious simplicity we are told she got there.

And how was her noble effort rewarded?

The cupboard was bare! It was bare. There were to be found neither oranges nor cheesecakes, nor penny buns, nor gingerbread, nor crackers, nor nuts, nor lucifer matches. The cupboard was bare! There was but one, only one solitary cupboard in the whole of that cottage, and that one, the sole hope of the widow and the glorious loadstar of the poor dog, was bare! Had there been a lot of nutmeg, a loin of lamb, a fillet of veal, even an ice from Gutter's, the case would have been different, the incident would have been otherwise. But it was bare, my brethren, bare as a bald head, bare as an infant born without a caul! Many of you will probably say, with all the pride of worldly sophistry, "the widow, no doubt, went out and bought a dog biscuit." Ah, no! Far removed from these earthly ideas, these mundane desires, poor Mother Hubbard, the widow, whom many thoughtful worldlings would despise, in that she only owned one cupboard, perceived—or I might say saw—at once the relentless logic of the situation, and yielding to it with all the heroism of that nature which had enabled her without deviation to reach the barren cupboard. She did not attempt, like the stiff-necked scoffers of this generation, to war against the inevitable; she did not try, like the so-called men of science, to explain what she did not understand. She did nothing. This poor dog had none! And then at this point our information ceases. But do we not know sufficient? Are we not cognizant of enough?

Would we dare to pierce the veil that shrouds the interior fate of Old Mother Hubbard, the poor dog, the cupboard or the bone that was not there? Must we imagine her still standing at the open cupboard door, or depict to ourselves the dog still dropping his disappointed tail upon the floor, the sought-for bone still remaining somewhere else? Ah, no! Let dear brethren, we are not permitted to attempt to read the future. Suffice it for us to glean from this beautiful story its many lessons; suffice it for us to apply them, to study them as far as in us lies, and bearing in mind the natural frailty of our nature—to avoid being widow, to shun the puny ruminations of Hubbard; to have, if our means afford it, more than one cupboard in the house, and to keep stores in them all. And, oh! dear friends, keeping in recollection what we have learned this day, let us avoid keeping dogs that are fond of bones. But, brethren, if we do, if fate has ordained that we should do any of these things, let us then go as Mother Hubbard did, straight, without curvetting or prancing, to our cupboard, empty though it be; let us, like her, accept the inevitable with calm steadfastness, and should we, like her, ever be left with a hungry dog and an empty cupboard, may future chronicles be able to write also of us, in the beautiful words of our text.

Seventy languages are said to be spoken in the ancient city of Tiflis, in Russia.

"And so the poor dog had none."

Toneline Is Beauty Aid, Announces Specialist

Mildred Louise Talk of Interest to Women.

As health is a first aid to beauty this story, told by Mildred Louise, beauty specialist, of Boston, Mass., is of unusual interest.

"I can recommend no better health giver than toneline," said Mildred Louise.

"I was for many months a victim of stomach trouble and nervousness. I had suffered terribly from pains that followed eating. Headaches also would add to my worries. Poor digestion finally brought on nervousness."

"Relief came, however, when I took the advice of several women who said, take toneline."

"Not long after I started the toneline treatment, my patrons began to remind me of the improvement in my condition. And because health is the quickest way to beauty, the improvement was particularly noticeable in my face."

"What toneline really did for me I cannot say. I am so grateful that I am very willing to recommend toneline publicly."

Toneline is a purely vegetable preparation which goes to the seat of common maladies—stomach and kidney trouble, catarrhal affections of the mucous membranes, liver ailments and impurities of the blood and quickly restores proper action. Toneline is being explained daily to many people at Wells and Haymakers.

Notice—As toneline is a wonderful flesh builder it should not be taken by any one not wishing to increase their weight ten pounds or more. Although many reports are received from those who have been benefitted by toneline in severe cases of stomach trouble and nervous dyspepsia, chronic constipation, etc.

Easter Fashions

The jockey cap type of hat, which was introduced in Paris a couple of seasons ago, is one of the spring models in silk and straw.

Tiny ostrich plumes trim some of the new hats, and a lovely one is made of horsehair braid with the little plumes gathered, some eight or ten of them, at one side of the crown.

Vells are attached to many of the spring hats. They are round or square vells, placed over the crown of the hat, and fastened snugly around the lower part of the crown with trimming bands of flowers.

One charming hat of this sort shows a veil that just covers the eyes in front and drops almost to the shoulders at the back. It is decidedly effective.

New automobile vells are made with glass clear mica over the face. These are truly comfortable to wear for they give the face protection from dust and wind, and, at the same time do not smother it; for there are tiny holes for ventilation in the mica.

Various methods are taken for producing the desired fringe that marks the new skirts. Sometimes a foundation of net, held out with hoops of bone or wire, is worn under the skirt. Sometimes the fullness is held out by means of horsehair crushed into the desired shape.

The measurements of the lower edge of the skirts held out by these various methods is stupendous—especially compared with the very narrow skirts we were wearing a year or so ago. Some of the new ones measure six and a half yards, and even more.

The bertha has come back again, or, at least, a drapery of lace or other soft material about the shoulders and bust that is strongly reminiscent of the bertha. This drapery is especially attractive used with sleeves that are off the shoulders—the dropped effect of Victoria fame.

Hand embroidery is used on summer frocks. Often it outlines conventional designs in beads. Sometimes big silk stitches making conventional flower designs are used in contrasting colors to the color of the frock. The beads used in this embroidery are of glass and porcelain and jet and steel.

Artificial flowers find a place on afternoon and evening frocks. They are used much like embroidery, sometimes being sprinkled at regular intervals over the net or tulle or lace of an evening frock, or used to trim the girdle of a satin frock.

Sometimes, too, embroidered flowers and artificial ones are strikingly combined, so that one can with difficulty tell where the one ends and the other begins.

Although wide girdles are used to a large extent, narrow—perhaps three inch—velvet ribbon is very effectively used with some of the full skirted models.

Alpaca is another fabric that, it is predicted, will find much favor this spring.

A French trick is to make the jacket longer on one side than the other. But a one sided effect of this kind has to be carefully balanced.

A flimsy evening dress entirely of black tulle has a tight fitting corsetlet of black velvet and velvet ribbon strappings over the shoulders.

Evening gowns are apt to be made of bright colored materials.

ONCE WEALTHY, NOW JOBLESS

Hundreds of Former Mexican Aristocrats Seeking Labor to Avoid Charity.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., April 22.—Hundreds of once wealthy Mexican aristocrats walk the streets of San Antonio, pitifully eager for any kind of work, at any wage they can get.

These men, women and children are divided into two classes—the shabby genteel and the ragged. All of them were driven from the broad acres and lives of luxury by sentences of death that today still await their return to seething Mexico. They prefer to stay here and be poor.

Other hundreds—there are about 6,000 Mexican refugees here—were unfortunate enough to bring gold with them when they fled from the land of too much trouble. They live in great style; and there are fashionable shops and exclusive places to live here that are supported largely by them.

Most of these refugees, proud of their pure Castilian blood, new to poverty and its humiliations, sensitive to charity, will accept any employment to keep from becoming public charges or private charges.

A copy boy on one of the local American newspapers here, earning $6 a week, was until the fall of Huerta, the petted son of a Mexican family of Tamaulipas, whose boast was that their ranch was a day's horseback ride in length and breadth.

Among this number are several hundred Catholic priests and other dignitaries of the church. Many of these exiles have been deprived of their estates through some whirl or other of the rapidly revolving wheel of Mexican fortune.

Residents tell of highly educated graduates of Chapultepec military academy, the West Point of Mexico, former captains, majors and even colonels in the army of old Porfirio Diaz who fled the country with him at his fall and who have refused to ally themselves with either Carranza or Villa, working as salaried porters, dishwashers and irrigation ditch hands for a livelihood.

These are the so-called "reactionary" Mexicans, the tattered remnants of the once haughty and wealthy Cientifico class, whose control over Mexico was as absolute as was that of Louis XVI. before the fall of Bastille.

What London was to the aristocratic emigre of the French revolution, San Antonio is to the banished aristocrat of Mexico. Today the best blood of the old regime is making San Antonio its home.

Here the best of Mexican doctors, lawyers, professional men, former cabinet officers, ex-governors of Mexican states, one time ministers to foreign courts, landed proprietors of vast estates, are living. There are about 12,000 Mexican refugees in Texas.
